Name and title:

Sun Huh, M.D., Ph.D, Editor-in-chief

Responsibilities:

Journal manager

Prior experience in scientific publishing:

Dr. Huh has volunteered as an editor-in-chief of Ewha Medical Journal (EMJ) since September 2023. He took on the role of journal manager because EMJ is a non-profit publication of the Ewha Womans University College of Medicine. No honorarium is paid to the editor-in-chief.

Dr. Huh graduated from Seoul National University College of Medicine in 1982 and received a PhD in parasitology in 1990. He became a tenure-track faculty member in parasitology at Hallym University in 1988. He retired in February 2024 but continues teaching as an Emeritus professor for medical students. In 1991, he joined the Korean Journal of Parasitology (Now Parasites, hosts and Diseases) editorial board and continued in this role until 2021. As a founding member, Dr. Huh has participated in the Korean Association of Medical Journal Editors since 1996. He has also edited the Journal of Educational Evaluation for Health Professions since 2005. His passion for medical journals in Korea has flourished through the establishment of KoreaMed and KoreaMed Synapse, as well as the foundation of the Editors' Academy. He has also worked as a founding member of the Korean Council of Science Editors since 2011. He has served as a member of the Steering Committee for Scopus Expert Content Selection & Advisory Committee (2021-Present).

He has published articles on editing and publishing, a list of which is available at <http://orcid.org/0000-0002-8559-8640>. His main interests include adopting measurement theory in medical education and journal consulting. He has always respected expert colleagues in manuscript editing, English proofreading, illustration, PDF layout design, information technology engineering for XML production, homepage management, and e-submission system management. He enjoys attending orchestra or opera recitals with these colleagues or editorial board members.
